MANAGER COMMENT

May 2025 was a month of recovery for global risk assets, driven by an easing of trade tensions between Europe and the United States. The Euro Stoxx 50 index gained 4.85%, while the S&P 500 rose by 6.65%, primarily led by cyclical and technology sectors. On the bond market, government bonds underperformed: the German Bund lost 1.10%, while the 10-year U.S. Treasury declined by 1.40%. Among corporate bonds, Investment Grade (IG) bonds posted a modest gain of 0.31%, while High Yield (HY) bonds performed better, up 1.65%. The U.S. dollar ended the month unchanged against the euro, with the EUR/USD pair closing at 1.1360 after hitting a low of 1.1090 mid-month, reflecting significant volatility. The primary concern remains the fragility of the U.S. Treasury market, impacted by rising yields and a steepening yield curve, exacerbated by Moody's downgrade of the U.S. sovereign rating. In particular, the 30-year Treasury risks breaking above 5% sustainably, potentially triggering volatility spillovers across dollar-denominated assets. From a strategic perspective, we maintain a low exposure to government bonds and duration, holding short positions on Bunds and 30-year U.S. Treasuries. During the month, we reduced exposure to Real Estate (RE) securities in favor of High Yield and Investment Grade CoCo bonds. On the equity side, we remain bullish, with a preference for the U.S. market, where recent underperformance and the prospect of a potential U.S.-China trade deal in the coming weeks could unlock further upside opportunities.
