MANAGER COMMENT

In October 2026, global equity markets recorded a moderate decline, with the MSCI World down 0.8%, although performance varied significantly across geographical regions and sectors. In the United States, the S&P 500 fell by 0.9% and the Nasdaq by 5.3%, weighed down by a correction in major technology stocks. Investors adopted a more cautious stance towards the substantial investments in artificial intelligence infrastructure, focusing on their future profitability and cash flow generation. This led to a rotation out of growth stocks and into value and defensive stocks. In Europe, performance was mixed: the STOXX 600 gained 1.9%, while the EuroStoxx 50 declined by 2.2%. Strength in the energy and defensive sectors supported some markets, while fiscal and political concerns in France persisted. Emerging markets, on the other hand, experienced a sharp correction (-8.6%), with the CSI 300 falling by 8.5%, primarily weighed down by weakness in Asian markets and pressure on technology stocks, which were exposed to a reassessment of expectations for AI investment.

Against this backdrop of market correction, the fund increased its exposure to technology stocks, with a particular focus on companies involved in the artificial intelligence value chain, taking advantage of investment opportunities at more attractive valuation levels. The fund (VAELCGE LX Equity) recorded a performance of -6.37% during the month.
